Catiline's Conspiracy was okay but it was The Jugurthine War that was most interesting, it's a classical war campaign narrative. There's war elephants and night battles and treks through the desert to remote towns. Interesting to read about ancient North Africa too, which you never hear about, aside from Carthage.

Catiline's War, The Jugurthine War, Histories by Sallust

The Jugurthine War offers a graphic depiction of the war against the king of Numidia, highlighting the power struggles in Rome and the brutal battles in Africa. A wide-ranging introduction sets Sallust and his works in their turbulent historical context, and considers their achievements as both history and literature.

Catiline's War, The Jugurthine War, Histories. Sallust (trans. A.J. Woodman) "'Sallust'—Gaius Sallustius Crispus—was writing his monographs on recent history between 42 and 35 BC, precisely at the time the future Augustus was fighting the civil wars that eventually defeated the oligarchy. Compared with Cicero (executed in 43), whose sympathies were wholly with the oligarchs, Sallust is a largely forgotten figure; but he provides a powerful contemporary account of the corruption of ...
