Nixon Kissinger And The Shah

Nixon, Kissinger, and the Shah offers a detailed account of three key historical episodes in the Nixon-Kissinger-Pahlavi partnership that shaped the global Cold War far beyond Iran's borders. It examines the emergence of Iranian primacy in the Persian Gulf as the Nixon administration looked to the shah to fill the vacuum created by the British withdrawal from the region in 1971.

On the morning of May 31, 1972, the shah of Iran, Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, received U.S. President Richard Nixon and his national security adviser, Henry Kissinger, at Tehran's Saadabad Palace in the foothills of the Alborz Mountains. That spring day, these three men were in high spirits.

Nixon, Kissinger, and the Shah: The Origins of Iranian ...

Despite Kissinger touting "geopolitical realities" to justify the embrace of the Shah, personal considerations proved preeminent. Nixon held the Shah in high regard, calling him "stronger than horseradish," and at one point saying, "I like him, I like him, and I like the country. And some of those other bastards out there I don't like."

Book Review: Nixon, Kissinger and the Shah: The United ...

The only person Henry Kissinger flattered more than President Richard Nixon was Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, the Shah of Iran. In the early 1970s, the Shah, sitting atop an enormous reserve of increasingly expensive oil and a key figure in Nixon and Kissinger's move into the Middle East, wanted to be dealt with as a serious person.

When the Shah went into exile in January of 1979, Nixon and Kissinger worked very hard to try to secure a safe haven for the Shah in the United States. They were highly critical of the Carter administration for not allowing the Shah to come to the United States, or very reluctantly. And in fact, Kissinger secured a safe haven for the Shah in Mexico, in the Bahamas. They visited him when he was staying in Cuernavaca in Mexico.
